For this purpose we are studying the relationship between two protein kinases, pp60c-src and the myosin light chain kinase, which are important mediators of signal transduction and actin cytoskeleton reorganization. It has been previously shown that pp60c-src is activated by insulin, polyphosphoinositides and thrombin. When cells are stimulated with insulin, pp60c-src phosphorylates myosin light chain kinase, in vitro and in vivo. The importance of myosin light chain kinase activity in mediating some of the responses to insulin has been confirmed by our observation that microinjection of an inhibitory peptide to this enzyme blocked insulin-stimulated membrane ruffling and transient expression of neurite-like processes in PC12 cells. There is considerable evidence to
